Why Study Social Studies, Secondary Education at EWU?

At the undergraduate level, the Social Studies Education Program leads to a Bachelor of Arts in Education degree and provides a broad-based preparation for teachers of the social studies in grades 5-12.

The program is supported by the following departments: Geography/Anthropology, Economics, Government, History, and Sociology. Students interested in pursuing an in-depth study of social science or social studies education should consult with the Social Studies Program director to develop an individual program of study and field experience.

Career Opportunities

Most social studies students do not intend to be professional historians, but rather to gain employment in the teaching profession and various other related fields.

Students use their knowledge, skills, and communication abilities as a stepping-stone to a variety of careers. This is especially true in business, government, journalism, law, and public education. Others range from research positions in business and public agencies, to archival, curatorial, and social work. Thus there are very few careers for which social studies

Other Degree Options

One major and one minor program in social studies education are available at the elementary level. Fifth-year programs for both elementary and secondary are also offered by the program.
